Captain Beefheart's 10 Commandments of Guitar Playing

1. Listen to the birds.

That's where all the music comes from. Birds know everything about how it should sound and where that sound should come from. And watch hummingbirds. They fly really fast, but a lot of times they aren't going anywhere.

2. Your guitar is not really a guitar Your guitar is a divining rod.

Use it to find spirits in the other world and bring them over. A guitar is also a fishing rod. If you're good, you'll land a big one.

3. Practice in front of a bush

Wait until the moon is out, then go outside, eat a multi-grained bread and play your guitar to a bush. If the bush dosen't shake, eat another piece of bread.

4. Walk with the devil

Old Delta blues players referred to guitar amplifiers as the "devil box." And they were right. You have to be an equal opportunity employer in terms of who you're bringing over from the other side. Electricity attracts devils and demons. Other instruments attract other spirits. An acoustic guitar attracts Casper. A mandolin attracts Wendy. But an electric guitar attracts Beelzebub.

5. If you're guilty of thinking, you're out

If your brain is part of the process, you're missing it. You should play like a drowning man, struggling to reach shore. If you can trap that feeling, then you have something that is fur bearing.

6. Never point your guitar at anyone

Your instrument has more clout than lightning. Just hit a big chord then run outside to hear it. But make sure you are not standing in an open field.

7. Always carry a church key

That's your key-man clause. Like One String Sam. He's one. He was a Detroit street musician who played in the fifties on a homemade instrument. His song "I Need a Hundred Dollars" is warm pie. Another key to the church is Hubert Sumlin, Howlin' Wolf's guitar player. He just stands there like the Statue of Liberty-making you want to look up her dress the whole time to see how he's doing it.

8. Don't wipe the sweat off your instrument

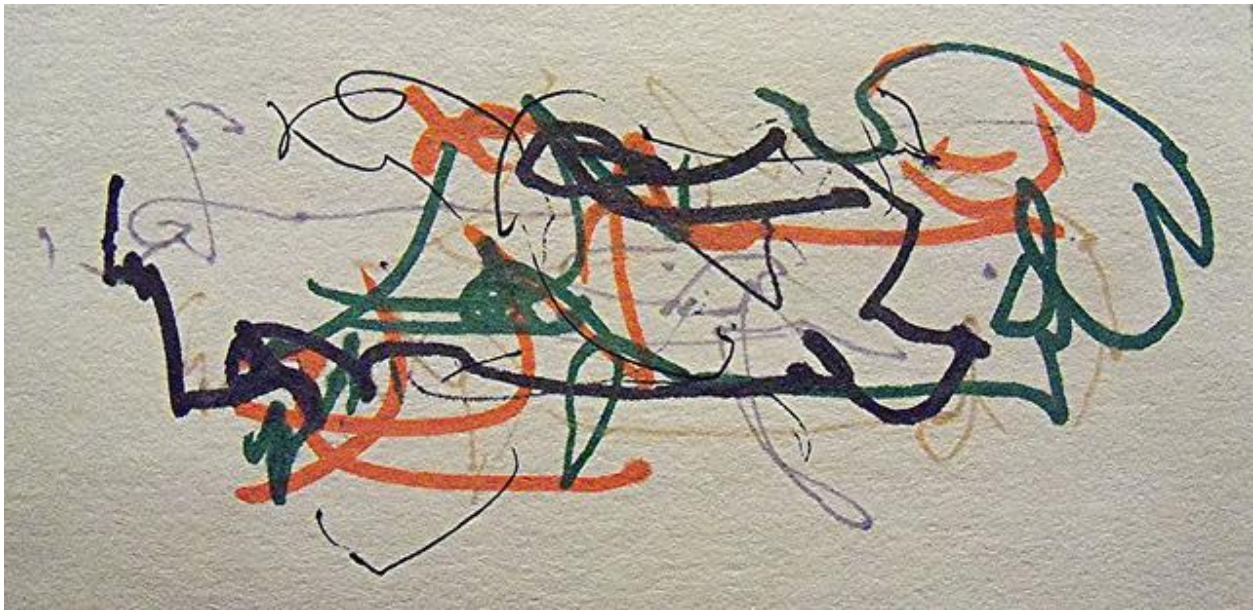
You need that stink on there. Then you have to get that stink onto your music.

9. Keep your guitar in a dark place

When you're not playing your guitar, cover it and keep it in a dark place. If you don't play your guitar for more than a day, be sure you put a saucer of water in with it.

10. You gotta have a hood for your engine

Keep that hat on. A hat is a pressure cooker. If you have a roof on your house, the hot air can't escape. Even a lima bean has to have a piece of wet paper around it to make it grow.



2. Your asemic writing is not really asemic writing. Your asemic writing is a divining rod.
Use it to find spirits in the other world and bring them over. Asemic writing is also a fishing rod. If you're good, you'll land a big one.

6. Never point your asemic writing at anyone
Your asemia has more clout than lightning.

8. Don't wipe the sweat off your asemia.
You need that stink on there. Then you have to get that stink onto your visual writing.

Hachure map
From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

In representing relief with hachures on a map, six rules are to be followed, according to G.R.P. Lawrence (1979):[3]

The hachures are drawn in the direction of the steepest gradient.
The hachures are arranged in rows perpendicular to their direction.
The length and thickness of each stroke represents the drop in height along its direction: a short and thick stroke represents a short and steep slope, while a long and thin stroke represents a long and gentle slope.
The strokes are spaced at an equal distance inside a row.
The strokes have the same thickness inside a row.
If the map is illuminated, strokes are thinner and farther apart on the illuminated side.

The Swiss cartographer Eduard Imhof set 5 similar rules:[4]

Hachures follow the direction of steepest gradient
Hachures are arranged in horizontal rows
Hachure length corresponds to the local horizontal distance between assumed contours of a certain interval
Hachure width is thicker for steeper slopes
Hachure density remains constant throughout the map area.

If the illumination is vertical, rule 5 is kept; in the case of oblique illumination, it is dropped.

LANGUAGE

In the Kabbalah and ancient Hebraic, each 'letter' represented a numerical value and consequently each word had the 'value' of the 'sum' of its letters. Words with equal 'value' were also equal in 'meaning.' In practical terms, this meant that Kabbalah scholars were required to consider both the individual 'meaning' of each word of text and the 'meaning' of all words of a related 'numerical value.' This created a systemof referentiality based on 'random' complexity, and like all cultural systems believed by its followers to be eternal.

This process is easily extended into present day conditions by assigning numerical values to letters (A=1, B=2, C=3 etc...). In any language a word will equal in 'meaning' a word with the inversion of its spelling, e.g., in English Won = Now. In the same way, "I am going shopping" has the same and equivalent "meaning" as "Defenistration at Prague".

In this way, it is possible to determine the 'average' of words - that is words whose numerical is equal to 13.5 times their number of letters.

Ideally, global implementation of this system could take place by assigning 'values' to the phonemes common to most languages, although this process would create a Eurocentric bias by excluding languages like Xchosa (click based languages).

Precious stones: Kunlun jade, mica
I saw Hunter Thompson speak at The Mosque in Richmond in the fall of 1978. He came out on stage, pretty close to on time, took a long look at the audience, said he needed a tape recorder and left. He came back about 45 minutes later with a tape recorder and a bottle of whiskey. He called Richard Nixon a thieving pigfucker. It was worth the wait just for that.
Josh Jones -- The “British Invasion” as a historical phenomenon, has achieved a status almost like that of Paul Revere’s ride, a watershed moment condensed to a singular image: The Stones, or—if you’re more inclined, The Beatles—step onto the tarmac, young girls scream, cameras flash, microphones jostle… suits abound. We remember the scenery, and the haircuts, but the history disappears. The all important context when the British landed in the mid sixties has to do with another invasion at the same time on England’s shores, of black American blues artists who toured the UK and performed on British TV, beginning in 1963: Howlin’ Wolf, Big Joe Williams, Muddy Waters, Lightnin’ Hopkins… and Sister Rosetta Tharpe.
